COURSE DESCRIPTION:

This course combines theoretical examinations of intentional faith-based social engagement and ‘real-time’ collective pursuits of such engagement as embodied in large contemporary networks of socially-engaged Christians (requiring pre-approval). The bulk of the course content will derive from student participation in a week-long annual or biannual conference of one of these networks (or of a similar network). An additional layer of theoretical analysis will be provided via course readings that outline tight connections between moral-ethical thought and action

CLASS OBJECTIVES:

- Theological and social analysis of select contemporary social problems;
- Strategies for effective ministerial and social responses to these selective problems;
- Familiarization with key social networks mobilized in response to the social issues in question;
- Reflection on the role of ministers as social analysts and activists and on boundaries between prophetic and priestly obligations;
- Delineations and critiques of contemporary activist ministry frameworks and of the definitions of community and of Christian calling that underlie these frameworks;
- The relationship between social criticism and practical social engagement; and
- Direct (i.e., in-person) and indirect (i.e., literary) exposures to contemporary embodiments of socially-engaged ministry.

PREREQUISITES: None. However, attendance at either the Samuel DeWitt Proctor Conference, Children’s Defense Fund Proctor Institute, or Gamaliel Race and Power in America Summit is required.
