COURSE DESCRIPTION:

In this course, students will be introduced to the theology and practice of preaching, with attention to the performative skills involved in effective communication in ministry settings. Topics include: the oral interpretation of Scripture, biblical exegesis for proclamation, the role of culture and context in preaching, the structure and rhetoric of sermons, and the non-verbal dimensions of communication.

CLASS OBJECTIVES:

Upon completion of this course, a student should be able to:

- Identify his or her gifts for and calling to the task of Christian proclamation
- Define and describe the theological and methodological issues at stake in the movement from a biblical text to a sermon in relation to a particular congregational context
- Give evidence of growth in the exegetical, rhetorical, creative, pastoral, and performative skills involved in the practice of preaching and communication in ministry
- Demonstrate working knowledge of the basic exegetical method and approaches to sermon design introduced in class through the creation and delivery of two sermons
- Exhibit the capacity to think critically and deeply about her or his own practice and listen with discernment to the sermons of others, using the theological and rhetorical language of homiletical criticism
