

“Baptism . . . and Living into Our Identity”
A Meditation on Luke 3:15-17, 21-22 for Baptism of the Lord Sunday
The Rev. Christine Chakoian, Vice President for Seminary Advancement

Jesus began his ministry this way: by being baptized—by being baptized by water and the Holy Spirit. He began his ministry by being claimed by God: “You are my Beloved Son,” or, as some translations read, “Today I have begotten you.” Jesus knew his baptism was so much more than a ritual, a rite of passage. His baptism was nothing less than his commissioning ... his choice to live into his identity ... his commitment to God’s claim on him for every aspect of his life.

Today we begin our ministry again by renewing our baptism—our baptism of water and the Holy Spirit. We begin this year again by being claimed by God: “You are my beloved child,” God says to us; you are begotten as Christ’s own, with Christ’s own DNA, a gift of the Holy Spirit that courses through us now. Our baptism, our renewal today, is so much more than a ritual, a rite of passage. Our baptismal renewal is nothing less than our commissioning ... our choice to live into our identity as members of Christ’s family... our commitment to God’s claim on us for every aspect of our life.

What does this mean for us? For each one it will have deeply personal implications. It is our opportunity to stand before God and ask, “Lord, what would you have me to do? How can I best be a steward of the gifts you have given me?” It is a sacred moment—one in which to consider our mission in life and how all our daily moments contribute to God’s own agenda for our world. It is a thoughtful moment—one in which to ponder the ways we detract from God’s mission ... by remaining self-focused or by bearing Christ’s name carelessly, ineffectively, or perhaps even shamefully. It is a deciding moment—one in which to claim again our high calling as the ones who bear Christ’s DNA, who bear the Lord’s name, and who represent his compassion, his justice, his forgiveness, his grace in every corner of the world we touch. And it is, finally, a joyful moment—one in which to celebrate our common ministry as members of the family of faith, to look around and marvel at the brothers and sisters in Christ we have been given in a fellowship of believers all yearning for the same end of faithfulness and fullness of life.

I don’t know how you will live out your sacred calling in the year ahead. Perhaps you will take up a new ministry. Perhaps you will re-examine your priorities—the time you spend at work or with your family, the ways you take care of your body or waste precious time on things that do not satisfy. Perhaps you will review your financial commitments so as to give more generously to the work of God and to efforts that make an impact on the world for good. And perhaps you will commit yourself anew simply to knowing Christ better in the year ahead—to discover the ways his Spirit is already stirring in your spirit and leading you closer to him.

Whatever else this celebration of renewal means to you, I pray it also means this: that you know, deep in your own heart, that you belong to God, that you are made part of Christ’s family. And I pray that you know you are no longer alone, you are surrounded by a cloud of witnesses, the household of faith. Finally, I pray that you will confidently feel Christ’s own hand, his presence, his comfort, and that you will be renewed by his strength and filled with his Spirit again. Amen.
